Hello Les,

I am going because of visa issues. It will be lovely that she is there though. It is not without its challenges as NYC is by far preferable to me over London and this timeline of packing up my life in two weeks is causing me anxiety and some health issues. I had anticipated doing it by October 15th which is when I legally have to leave. It is next to impossible to find a decent and affordable place two weeks out. And as an interior designer, not made easier, as I have high standards and my eye sees everything!!

Anyway, the positives are, I will still come and visit and I am a British Citizen so the opportunity and freedom I have there career wise is incomparable to here. Night and day ;) And for that I look forward to it and now my life will be pretty different in a positive way!!

Thank you for your help. lets see if I make the flight or if I have died or had too many nervous breakdowns by then!!

Les can you look into options that are on the later side on the 10th, like as close to midnight as possible ;) departure and arrival airports not of great concern to me. J knows that I am looking into accommodation, but you do what you have to regarding letting him know / following up. You can say I told you I am doing it and that I would collect options if you need to. I think that it's easier this way because I know the transport links to my sister who is just south of the city. So I am looking central / south west like Chelsea, South Kensington etc. Close to Victoria station which has a direct train to Gatwick and to my sister.

Thank you so much for your patience and help 💎💎💎💎💎
