Hi guys. I had a closer look at the panels today and it looks like the current images are a type of wall paper themselves. There are a few seams which don't line up as you can see in the photo. I don't think we want to compromise these, but rather try and mount something over them in case he wants to go back to them one day. I'm not sure how we could mount something without damaging them? Would it make sense to have someone come have a look at these in-person to get a better sense for options and mounting possibilities?
