Well, avoidi=g won't help either babe- look at where that got you (pay cut). &nbs=;

I would list=everything that has your fingerprint- whether its something you do directl= or something where your knowledge is needed. How often are you giving advice to those around him, etc? That=should be on the list- like:

1. Research =amp; source chefs
2. Confirm d=ily activities of Sue

You get my d=ift- because if there is something that people turn to you for, then he sh=uld know. Just because you are not physically doing something, does not mean your fingerprint isn't on it. </=:p>

I really thi=k you should give him a list by the afternoon. You need to pull the =and aid on this- and just do it. Once you have a draft, I can help you finalize if you want. But literally go through eac= person that works for JE and then think how you make their jobs easier, p=ssible or better. You could even make the list like that: list the name th=n all duties pertaining to that person, then so on...the first part can be just you and you do specifi=ally for him. But what he needs to realize is that you are the BACKB=NE of the organization. And like the backbone, you are there even wh=n it goes unnoticed. That is what you need to communicate to him. xo
