yes--God is an unfortunate term -with many interpretations. For me God i= the ground of being as pure consciousness-- potential for all experience--=before the conditioning.

Tagore the Indian poet/ philosopher says "God is every child =hat is born and proof as well that God has not ( yet ) given up on hu=an beings "

Got it. I wonder if you then concur or find resonance with Paul Tillic's idea of god as the "ground of being"?

What do you mean by "being"? Here I think we encounter language problems so semantic precision is helpful

Being --the ontological primitive--wants to know .

Shermer is assumed identity conditioned by religion( not anymore ), culture, mythology, ideology, science ( maybe even scientism ). Genes , neural networks etc=are symbolic signatures of that conditioned identity .

The bigger question--Who or what wants to know if they have free will or not ?=

I do. Me. The self who calls itself Michael Shermer. The pattern of information in the genome and connectome stored inside the skin and skull of the entity known as Michael Shermer.

How do you answer that question?

Michael
