Sounds very interesting, and would like to hear it spelled out more carefully, particularly with regard to the distributional effects.

Next time.

you would be looking at a small subset of the issue that would provide little actual knowledge. money and taxes construct a complex system.- I guess that merely counting words and their distributions in a paragraph you would agree. would not be a good use of our time. when we are together I will take all the time you like to at least give you my description. for ex . though the bottom rung does not itemize. its has an earned income credit , they get actual money. it comes partially as a result of the alternate minimum tax, (this tax like the mortgage deduction also only applies to those that itemize).

Subject: home mortgage deduction , again , one needs to read to the end of the story to reach a more complete conclusion. the home mortgage deduction as i said cost the govt approx 150 billion dollars in revenue. easy to verify, as a result of the deduction allowed , as you postulated, for the top earners. . However, a deduction , no matter how large- has no revenue impact whatsoever , if it cannot actually be used to offset otherwise payable tax. . it is not a credit , it is a deduction. two years ago the amount, due to the home interest deduction a was 112 billion in lost tax REVENUE. However that being said the govt instituted an Alternative Minimum tax .- in essence to balance out the perceived disproportional nature of the benefit . It application means that you cannot deduct any amount above a certain limit against your income. no matter how high your deductions. targeted at your favorite whipping boys. this alt min tax raised 270 billion this year alone . . a net positive for the govt. .scheme - allowing a deduction . keeping the lobbyists happy , but denying its efficacy by imposing a limit on its use. and in most cases eliminating any real net benefit to the high income filer Fun isnt it.? , ! much easeier for me to explain that copy movement etc. look forward to our next encounter
