In this talk for the How To Academy based on his new book on Spies, Codes and Guerrillas, Max Hastings will talk about the espionage and intelligence machines of all sides in World War II, and the impact of spies, code-breakers and partisan operations on events.

He will examine key moments, such as the Soviet espionage operations which dwarfed those of every other belligerent in scale, as well as the code-breaking operation at Bletchley Park – the greatest intelligence achievement of the conflict.

The talk will also touch on other less well known tales of high courage as those, at sea and in the air such as womanising Richard Sorge pretending to be a committed Nazi whilst spying for the Soviet Union from the German embassy in Tokyo, and Joseph Rochefort, the awkward, overlooked US naval intelligence officer who in a moment of inspiration became the man who won the battle of Midway.

For an evening full of high policy, human drama, treachery, guerrilla warfare, ciphers, clandestine meetings in cafes, and wireless operators tapping out messages across the airwaves, this is the talk to come to.

Max Hastings is the author of numerous books, many about warfare, including the bestselling and critically acclaimed 'All Hell Let Loose'. In his early career as a correspondent, he reported on the 1982 Falklands War, experiences which he described in his memoir 'Going to the Wars'. A Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature and an Honorary Fellow of King's College London, he was knighted in 2002.
