Mitchell Bard in The San Diego Union-Tribune

San Diego museum ignores honoree's use of Jewish slave labor.

When Jews say, "Never Again," they are referring to the categorical imperative to prevent the emergence of a genocidal leader, and to speak out and take action in response to threats to ethnically cleanse or exterminate another people. The phrase is also a cry to study the past to understand how and why the Holocaust happened. Part of that education process is to accurately document the actions and experiences of bystanders, perpetrators and victims. This process is undermined when institutions such as San Diego's Air & Space Museum whitewash the record of Nazi collaborators.

Note: The Museum has said it would revise Heinkel's biography on their website.

What did Jewish rituals look like 2000 years ago?

Robert Goldenberg, Professor Emeritus of Judaic Studies at Stony Brook University in New York, discusses the Jewish rituals of the Hellenistic and Roman periods, and why a practicing Jew today will unlikely recognize any of them.
