I think you are right to be cautious - I am going to try and get hold of a guy called Humphrey Butler (was head of jewels dept at Christies for years) and will be best placed to have a look at the stone for you. He is also utterly trustworthy and discreet as this obviously needs to happen quietly - but let me see if he is in London at the moment as everyone is on holiday - kids and I are in [REDACTED] - divine! 1 interesting people involved , these things usually turn out to be scams. . however they said that a woman owns it , the GIA certificate gives provenance? and she needs to sell but doesn't want people to know she is in difficulty. the usual story. my friend Terje Rod Larsen is in London. I would like someone to view the stone. first step. if real. . and no later switched. let's say it's worth 20 m at auction. I'd buy it for 12 . no more. , is there a person to see it. to verify it's real. ?

Very nice!

What do you want me to do? Find someone in London to value it? Look at it? Do you want a price to buy it at for you or are you helping someone out? I ask only because it will help me put you in touch with the right person - call me if you need x
