Why aren't Muslim countries leading the way to the Palestinian cause? The question has renewed relevance upon a United Nations agency's recent release of its list of donors. Western countries and Japan are the most significant contributors to the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), while the only major Muslim givers are Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Ronen Yizhak, head of the Middle East Studies department at Israel's Western Galilee College, told JNS.org that among Arab and Muslim nations, "there is a lot of talking, but little actual deeds or financial aid to the Palestinians."

For those who'd never given any thought to Ariana Grande before the terrorist atrocity at her concert in Manchester, it took a few minutes to make sense of suicide bomber Salman Abedi's target selection. Eventually, it dawned. In the name of a global-Islamic caliphate, Abedi set out to slaughter teenage girls, Grande's primary audience. The ideological roots of Abedi's attack are given exquisite expression in the writings of Muslim Brotherhood founder Sayyid Qutb, who in 1949 studied in Greeley, Colorado. Qutb's writing from his time in Greeley shows how desire, when fused with hatred of relaxed sexuality and expressions of femininity, can be devastating once it is incorporated into an ideology of conquest, writes JNS.org columnist Ben Cohen.

"This is a dream that finally comes to fulfillment," said Father Juan Solana, general director of the Magdala Center <<http://jns.us5.list-manage.com/track/click?u=20b32ab0e3215f9f006699472&id=d55bd5e330&e=396a6a85e5>>, whose work focuses on the stone dubbed a "crossroads of Jewish and Christian history." Scholars contend the Magdala Stone's menorah depiction is the oldest carved image of the Second Temple's menorah ever found.
