Instead of grand plans which you never=follow why don't you start with a one week plan and actually do it . A=l else a waste of thought time . You are spending your time planning and y=t to have finished one task well . Sorry

In case I don't get 100 I have just checked NYU which doesn't require any Toefl or SAT. I have a good friend going there in September and even if it's not one of the top schools it's still better than Marangoni... What do you think ?

I made my plan:

April-June: studying toefl, exercise, driving license, laser
June-July: Acting school
July-August: school summer program or internship + learn about accounting

September:

Option 1:

- If I manage to get 100 at toefl in June. finding accredited school and then transfer to US

Could I go to NYU if not in September since you know the director ?

Option 2:

If I don't get 100. Starting work experiences ( internships = until I find something I like.

Option 3:

Finish my shit school...
