
From: [REDACTED]
Sent: Friday, March 20, 2015 11:37 PM
To: Jeffrey Epstein which of the inventions in the twentieth century has been the most significant for the world ? Why ? Use specific reasons and examples to support your choices.

In my opinion, among all the great inventions created in the twentieth century, the most significant has been the internet. This new technology revolutionized society in many different fields such as communication, Business and education.

First, communication has radically transformed our way to exchange information by using new tools such as the email. People have now the opportunity to send instant messages at very low cost. This global interaction has led to the exchange of new ideas for personal or professional purposes. An other tool linked to this field are the social media that created bonds between people all over the world and connecting them to each other.

An other area that has changed in a very positive way thanks to the internet has been Business. In fact, people can now shop directly from home by using an e-commerce, offering a wider selection of goods. Finance is also a new field that has developed a new virtual way of managing people's money by changing the structure of economy.

Finally, it is important to mention the improvement of education as a result of the internet by offering a wider access to informations. It is a huge step toward progress because everyone can now be self taught just by learning things taken from the internet. People are now aware of what happens in the world and about new inventions and discoveries.

=C2♦ In short, I strongly believe that the internet has been the greatest invention not only of the twentieth century but of all time. Thanks to this invention we have the possibility to improve in many different fields of our society.