thanks MB. I am talking to ARnie about round the clock =are. He can't do 24/7, but will do as close to that as =ossible. He just needs a few hours break to recharge =imself. Warren is basically needs full attention. =C2♦

I =ommented earlier that I believe his condition is very =fragile and he can die at any point; I would be surprised if he =asts 3 weeks; (note I have not SEEN him in 10 months). Linda has lost =t but since WARREN requested he die at home I think it would be best if =inda has the proper supports and he stays at home. I talk to her =aily and I think she will get by; she will collapse emotionally once he =oes die irrespective if it it is in his home or at a facility. As long =s she knows we are supporting her I think it can be done. Years =rom now there wont be any guilt she didn't carry out his last wishes. =here is no getting around the profound sadness of this miserable death. =o:p>

Michael,

With your experience how much longer do you think he has? Also, as this progresses do you think he will reach a point where he is no longer aware of his surroundings? If so, at that point it might be best for Linda's sake to move him to a care facility.

I agree, lets try to keep him at home. His dignity is shot and this situation is irreversible. Let him stay in his own bed and pass in peace. This is still so surreal to me.

Very generous of you . He probably should be in a facility but he wanted to die at home. I'm hoping with basic 24 hour/around the clock assistance; the hospice team as needed, and my talking to her Linda will get through it. If it becomes intolerable and he is truly out of it I'm sure he can be moved. For now lets try to follow his request.
