Here's a more accurate way to look at it: there are certain jobs that are so inherently polarizing that regardless of how well you do them, half the people will think you are an incompetent, partisan hack. Ken Starr was universally respected as a capable, smart, high-integrity lawyer before he became independent counsel. No, many (if not a majority of) people think he is a right-wing henchman who acted dishonorably and incompetently. That's what my handlers worry about.

my view, - if you are as solid ( read -; capable ) as I think you are, little downside . If you are a fraud, the rough and tumble new world that is here to stay will strip the veneer away ( read - scandal ). and then you will be damaged goods. ( secret service lady). Your handlers are , I guess , concerned that you will take a beating. most high level jobs however now seems to require one.
