Building off the last few years of reports r=garding clandestine relations between Israel and Saudi Arabia, motivate= by their shared concerns over the Iranian threat, two recent developme=ts highlight a potential route for Israel to firm up support within the A=ab world. Egypt ratified a treaty to hand over two strategic islands in t=e Red Sea to Saudi Arabia, while Saudi Arabia's King Salman promo=ed his son Mohammed bin Salman to crown prince, making him next in line=to be king. "If Egypt and Saudi Arabia can get together, whether=on confronting Iran or Qatar, or even the exchanges of these two island=, then that is beneficial for Israel," said Joshua Teitelbaum=2C a professor of Middle Eastern Studies at Bar-Ilan University.

The headlines of the Jewish press this week were filled with stories about angry American Jews arriving in Israel and denouncing the Israeli government's decision regarding egalitarian prayer at the Western Wall. This week's other headlines, however, reported some threats to Israel that are genuinely existential, not merely a rhetorical flourish. While American Jews speak about "fighting" over the Western Wall issue, Israeli Jews who could be hit by Syrian mortars or Hamas rockets are the ones doing the real fighting, writes JNS.org columnist Stephen M. Flatow.

Driving into Timna Park, a nature reserve bounded by majestic, red-tinted craggy hills, it's easy to feel the awe and serenity that's the hallmark of any desert experience. Drive 20 minutes south, and you'll arrive at the brash Red Sea resort town of Eilat, where water sports and shopping are the order of the day. Timna is less than 10 minutes by car from the new Ilan and Assaf Ramon Airport that's scheduled to open next spring near Eilat, in what is expected to be a game-changer for southern Israel's tourism scene.
