Rahm needs to be beyond bold. He is on the verge of losing the city (think Baltimore). I'm talking on the scale of declaring curfews and enforcing it. He won't do it. Ken is an interesting guy. Very smart. A bit like Summers in the sense of awkward social skills. He is building a sustainable business model that doesn't require being smart every day. Lots of turnover at Citadel, but that may be more at the trading desks where points of profit are in play. Ken is a little in, all of the time. In my view, he was very decent in the divorce drama and is someone who prides himself on civic engagement and keeping his word.

Yep. The stars are lining up for trouble across a number of dimensions. Just back from China. Very interesting meetings. They believe they have the tools to manage their economy. I pitched that economies are now so interdependent that managing their own is necessary but not sufficient to assure domestic stability.
