Subject: pilot personality

Pretty good description =f a typical pilot personality:

<=ont class="Apple-style-span" size="2">"Pilots are positive but they=remain so by questioning everything that could go wrong. They are diligent=but they do not like rushing, especially to meet artificial deadlines. The= are interested in what's going on but like to have a quick overview of th= big picture at the outset and they like their information to be concise. =inally, they are cooperative but never ask them to delegate decisions abou= safety."

<=ont class="Apple-style-span">"Pilots are members of a unique group of pe=ple -- a group that is sometimes difficult to understand, at least for non-pilots. In some w=ys, pilots are the most consistent and even-keeled group anyone is likel= to meet, which makes it all the more surprising when a pilot's behavior=seems contradictory and inconsistent. What comprises a typical pilot's p=rsönality? What characteristics do they generally share? Industrial psyc=ologist Robert Rose, Ph.D., answers these questions and more as he takes=a look at why understanding your personality profile may help your perso=al and professional relationships work a lot more effectively"
