He has 20 percent chances of recovery, he is not able to speak and his left side is paralysed, he fell of the stairs 10 days ago and he has a hematoma on the outskirt of his his brain, I saw him on wednesday and he was normal and was supposed to go home on friday , on thursday he started numbling and he started to be paralysed they operated him on friday( drilled a hole in his brain to get out the pressure ), apparently the cause of it was that he is on macomat ( a blood thinner) and the cardiologist pushed the neurologist to put him back on....dilemma of choice the cause is done-how quickly this can go...

I feel so helpless holding his hand, reading to him , make him listen to music and not being able to do more

Idea what I can do more or what subconsciously would do him any good?

I will be in London for the next time

Hope all is good with you

Kiss
