Very good. Surely the issue is that Obama will go down badly in Nov and then learn, re-group and amend direction as Clinton did halfway through. If Obama can't or won't do this, he's finished.

larry, Hope this finds you well.. My more colorful issues are now thankfully only a dim memory. I have spent the last couple of months with many of the most sohisticated investors/ business persons (igender neutral). I thought Id give you the unadorned report. The predominant view of the real issue is the rhetoric coming from the administration. Soros Roubini, etc, singing the chicken little anthem, is only supported by the vast chorus of the finacier club as they truly believe that the administration is anti-business. I'm aware that the self report card of your collegues is that they are merely misunderstood, and have been unfairly mislabeled . Most of the technical buttons have already been pushed , but what is needed is a mood changer not a rate or reg change .If it were a football game , I would tell you the crowd is no longer fully behind your team, though many are wearing your school sweatshirts . The grass has been changed, the football repressurized , the lights are brighter and the drink prices are lower. however the points needed to win are still only a wish, You need to change the quarterback, score a couple of fast goals , and the mood cfould change quickly, You need to provide hope . A change in the economic leadership , accompanied by a change in rhetoric and small victories would I beleive once again get the crowd excited. , BTW , I dont watch sports.
