I am super tired.

You'd be amused by the current crop of patients that are currently sitting on my service. The nursing staff just found a bloody knife in the backpack of one of my patients who shot himself in the face. THe blood on the knife is not his blood type. A bit of a freakout now so I have to spend the next hour talking to police. I was hoping to get to fedex to send you a box of papers but I'm probably not going to get there. I wish I could just plug you into my brain so you could know what I know.

I've had another thought too that's interesting. About how the parasympathetics might be driving the inflammatory response behind atherosclerosis.

For now though, I have to deal with my collection of super sickies here at the hospital and catch up with my day job at the foundation. I am trying to get you some stuff to read but the forces of nature are conspiring against me. Can you get PubMed?

Meanwhile, our friend Boris is sitting out on the balcony of the Fasano hotel in Rio.

Miss you.
