Jeffrey,

I'm really sorry that the s*&^torm doesn't seem to be over. I wish you all the strength, resourcefulness and good humor you can muster to deal with all the scuzzy behavior you encounter.

I get the idea that I don't rank high among your correspondents but I can easily bring to your attention more of some of the amazing or delightful things I encounter (in science, medicine, technology) -- I just don't know whether that would make me more of a pest than a friend.

I assume you're aware of the TED conference videos online, yes?
Which have you liked? Loved? Hated?

Have you viewed any of the Long Now Foundation's lectures, the "Seminars About Long-term Thinking"? Several are on the fora.tv website. I just attended one in San Francisco that's not posted yet by David Eagleman -- like me, a neuroscientist; like me, very interested in history; unlike me, a best-selling author of literature! I'll let you know when that's available.

Best,
David
