On that note, let me update you on what has happened in the past couple of weeks.

I am continuing the conversation with Alex Rothschild to be an Limited Partner (essentially an investor) in their China fund. I am doing it because it seems they are good people to be with in the long haul. Also, we think we can help them to leverage their platform to do lot more things with China. I am inclining towards running that operation full time. But, there is still many issues need to be work out with them for this to happen.

I continue to explore this private banking / wealth management idea. Talked to a long time friend on Wall Street who used to run Credit Suisse north america wealth management operation yesterday. He seems greatly intrigued and believe it should work. He wants to help me fine tune the plan and bring it to Ramont Beard of Julius Beard, whom he know for a long time. He just called to tell me there is an article on Wall Street Journal today about this type of trend, managing emerging wealth in Asia.

We are also investigating an opportunity to take a stake in the largest asset management company in China, and will starting working on it after this holiday.

Plus, there is the last push to get the airport operation started in the next couple of months. There is a lot of work going back to in Beijing.

He is an unusual person. He has been hugely successful as an asset/wealth adviser and mover of markets; very plugged into, amongst others, JP Morgan; operates widely in the world of science and academe; is largely unpolitical but well connected; and has been subject to a tough time in his private life. You can be open with him.
