First Grade

Twelve boys each paying $12,500 per year, meet with one teacher in a rented room in Park Slope. They are going to Grandview Prep in Boca Raton, Florida. The curriculum they study is about reading and building. They build things that boys like to build and they read about how to do it. They need to purchase supplies and they learn about adding and about money. They build toy trucks and have races perhaps. Or they build an airplane and try to fly it in the park. Then they build a robot. The teacher does not teach them what to do, she simply points them towards materials and makes sure they stay focused.

When they are finished, they present what they have done to another group of boys in another city. They compare their results and then criticize, in writing, what the other class has done. They try again and try to improve. Later, they make a movie about what they did. They write the script as soon as they are able to do that. Later, they plan a trip to visit the other group in Florida or Chicago or wherever they are. They make friends with the other kids and create Facebook pages about their activities so they can see how they compare to the other group. They teach each other and learn about the place that the others live. Eventually they visit the other kids.
