A mixed bag - but certainly enough to begin a solid relationship that could lead to revenue streams and ultimately maybe even support for other initiatives like Mother's Army. Most positive is the news they are interested in a range of licensed products for Little Red. This could be just the revenue stream we talked about. Also positive is the idea they would help promote your film projects: Young Victoria and maybe even Little Red.

Disappointed about Mother's Army and Pony Express but you can still use your participation in the forum to generate awareness and to recruit other sponsors for these initiatives.

Also don't think any of this conflicts with the QVC option ... In fact they both are quite complementary!

Mary

I

Dear Duchess,

I hope this note finds you well. As I mentioned in my last correspondence, I have been working with various areas at Target on the many opportunities you presented to us.

I want to summarize our current thoughts and let you know where we believe there is some interest in proceeding.

We would be interested in hearing more about your plans to bring the film Young Victoria to the states, and how we might help in the premiere; as well as the DVD.

We would like to show our buying teams Little Red and see if there might be an opportunity to produce some license product in conjunction with the books. On this project, we are also interested in your plans to take it to a series or film.

Our Community Relations team reviewed the details on Mother's Army and the associated programs. Our internal team has been working on developing a forum of celebrity mothers that would address some of the same issues you outlined. Because of this, they would need to pass on the opportunity to participate in your program, but would like to open up dialogue on having you be part of the Target forum.

Unfortunately, due to previous commitments we would have to decline on the Lite Meals proposal, as well as sponsoring the recreation of the Pony Express ride.

We deeply appreciate the many opportunities you presented, and await word from you if you would like to continue to discuss the projects I outlined.

All the best,

Karen
