Just got a pair of a very high quality lens (non-izon), with the same exact Rx. The IZON beats it by far for clarity.... in all progressive lenses, you still (IZON included) get distortion when your eye deviates from the optic zone of the lens; that being said, you must point your nose at what you're looking at, in order to avoid distortion.

You gonna come to NY? I'm locked in, and evidently the list gets better and better.
