We're structured as a charity...

and this is just our money losing venture.

No, it's a money losing operation without 501.c3 status.

But lots of folks just contribute to the cause.

- 1) Gadgetoff: you will be there in spirit... and if you want to dress incognito, the offer to join us stands
- 2) If you can help, anonymously, with the funds to truck round trip some scientific gear and an array of optical illusion and other devices... from that mutual friend in California, it would be a great help. Est. round trip trucking cost: $10 k... we have some kids willing to do the shleping.. and, as the Rabbi said in a once funny joke, if any money is left over, I'll give it back. I need to know PDQ on this...

3) Thanks for listening to my discussion about the Hourglass Initiative. You asked for a simple RFP. I owe you that... but am reworking it for you... so it will come after Gadgetoff.

4) I am sending you two articles: one about AQ Khan and the Hourglass initiative (on Huffington Post) and another write up on the Hourglassinitiative.org website.

5) If you need advice on the potential blowback of charitable acts... perhaps I can offer my long experience in journalistic misconstrual ... or "How to take gold and turn it to look like dogshit." Very specialized skill.
