Subject: FW: Nancy update

Andrew is at the hospital and just sent out this e-mail.

Nancy just came out of surgery and all went well. They put a small titanium clamp on the vessel that ruptured and closed her back up.

She is not through the woods because following this kind of occurrence, there is frequently a reaction by the other blood vessels called vasoconstriction, that can lessen the flow of blood to the brain. They have a number of remedies for this but it would be a serious condition and there is a good chance she will get somewhat worse before she gets better.

She will be waking up in the next hour or so, and I will update you when there is anything substantive to report. They will want her to stay in the hospital for another two weeks at least to monitor her progress.

I will read her your emails and I know they will put a smile on her face.

Maxson and Jasper have been here at the hospital and they are handling it very well because they know their mom is strong like bull.
