Here is my take.

We experience reality in

=the HUMAN UNIVERSE

1 Everyday reality is a human construct .

2 Fundamental reality is the awareness , the excitations of which, are the experience of observer & observed in the timeless moment of now .

3 The fundamental experience of both observer and observed is sensations= images, feelings , thoughts . ( SIFT)

4 Systems of thought ( human constructs ) are many --religious, theological, philosophical, scientific, economic, political, primitive.

Sensations, images, feelings, thoughts are entangled modifications of awareness , and the result of social and cultural conditioning & current system of education .

5 Therefore no construct has a privileged position over another. </=>

6 The construct is real for the being embedded in it.

7 Excitations of awareness are on off modulations of fundamental awareness.

8 Excitations are in time , awareness is not in time .

9 Birth , death , body, mind , brain , universe, God , stars , galaxies,=Big bang -anything that has been given a name, by humans ( itself a label = are all constructs.

10 Freedom lies in the experience of identity beyond constructs --prior to awareness/ consciousness --prior to subject/object split.

11 All human suffering is the result of attachment to a construct including the fear of the construct we call death. Death happens to an experience not to the awareness in which experience is born and dies in the timeless moment of now.

12 Freedom is now in --being

DNA , bacteria, brain --anything humans have given names to are hu=an constructs --the entire universe including what we call "God"=is human construct. Reality is awareness and its excitations experienced =s observer and observed -classification and description into form and phenomena are human constucts-products of language--linguist=c, mathematical, scientific --useful but not fundamental Every universe of every being is their own construct. Those with similar DNA agree most on the construct. The universe of a bacterium in a dish is much different than ours, which is close to that of our dog while the bacterium's is closer to a yeast. These are all valid universes changing with the DNA-encoded perception of each species.

contemplating math symbolically,

when we divide 1 by an infinitely large number we most closely approximate O.

1/infinity = O,

This " I " experiences being a singular unity that is continually being divided by infinite variations on a theme, re-creating what " I " AM BEing as an awareness that is receiving and reflecting some sense of all that ever was, is and will be, as no body going nowhere, unborn, deathless, immeasurable, indivisible, timeless consciousness.<=div>

Hugs, Sperry,

Hooray! You acknowledge there is form.

Your=last sentence, however, for me, does not deal with form enough.

The point=unfolded to make the ultimate case for indivisibility but even points are&nbsp;divisible.

Immortal=font size="4"> is a&nbs=;theological concept which I believe applies (like eternal) only in the sense that atoms recycle.

This - below - appears to be so to this " I. " Does =ny of 'this' make sense to any of 'you' ?

Without both hydrogen and oxygen there would be no water--which makes trans=ent life possible.

The zen chant we all know, form is formlessness, formlessness is form, can = experienced by humanity as whole.

Without formlessness form would not transform in space over time. With=ut form formlessness would be nothing at all.

These two ingredients constantly mixing together, perpetuate their cha=acteristics. Formlessness uniting all as one, while forms attempt to perfect their capacity to be like formlessness-=indivisible, immortal, all knowing consciousness.
