Subject: Re: Harry Cliff: Have we reached the end of physics? | TED Talk | TED.com

every few years a scientist comes=out and says we know all we can know about X . =A0 it is always seen in hindsight as silly . at best

=br>

Einstein, and his buddies , thought that biology was =oo hard to study, and after hundreds of years .and the smarlest= mathematicians , scientists in the world trying- mother natu=e has not let scientists look up her skirt.

I wan= you to think about distributions rather than individuals. =A0 probability distributions rather than a single =oint on the curve. (a bell curve if you prefer) knowi=g that the average height of men is 5 foot 8 . and taking a la=ge population. when you ask me a question =A0 re the height of deepak. I can tell you, hes less tha= 9 feet tall and larger than two feet tall. =A0 Thats it. no other reality , though hundreds =exist in our survey. we can say nothing about deepak

w=en studing pressure in a cylinder , mathematics and physics=C2 allows us to sum over all the molecules. it says NOTHING =A0 about any one molecule. within bounds. of course. ie we k=ow it is not perfectly still

If you postulate that knowing a=person is like trying to study a molecule . maybe=the only thing we can say , is that given 1000 people. some will be=happy , some will be sad. and which one is unknow=ble. (like the molecule). and by making one idividual=happier , to keep the distribution the same nature makes someo=e else unhappy. . thats the way it works with money , =eight, , the number of people killed on the roads each year. =onstant at around 50k people but says nothing about which one will=be killed.
