<<http://rsch.baml.com/r?q=8d6sH!!DD69R=b3Trj2mZQ&e=jeevacation%40gmail.com&h=Jc000A>> Excessive easing by the central bank could end up depriving the market of low-risk assets and raising systemic risk.

Japan: All eyes were on the 30Y JGB Auction and rates are stable post the results. The bid-to-cover ratio in the 30y JGB auction was of 3.07 and stronger than prior 2.64. However, we are seeing very limited flows post auction results and no follow-through buying interests for now. While 10y JGB yields fell after the auction, the 40y did not. In equities, TPX is down 1% MTD but crowded defensive sectors are down 6% MTD and unloved high beta sectors are up=3%.

=b>Global Equity Volatility Insights= Last week's sharp sell-off in JGBs renewed concerns of forced selling=by risk parity funds. For example, a -2% daily decline=in the S&P 500 coupled with a -0.6% fall in 10y Treasury prices (poor =iversification) could trigger a 25% deleveraging (of unlevered notional) t=day, whereas a -4% SPX drop and +1% bond rally (good diversification) would generate no selling pressure, underscoring the critical role played by bond-equity correlation in governing the severity of risk parity unwinds.<=u>

UK: GBP traded below 1.3000, after comments from the <=pan>BoE's Ian McCafferty. In an op-ed in The Times, he noted that if the UK economy proves to have turned=down in line with initial survey signals, he believes more easing would likely be required. At the same time he acknowledges that rates can be cut closer to zero and QE could be stepped up. The article goes on to say that the BoE should follow a gradual approach in how it responds to Brexit given information on the exact reaction is still very limited. While McCafferty was in favour of last week's rate cut, he was one of three officials to vote against more QE.=/span>

In Gold we are still seeing further interest by investors to buy year-end upsides, so sentiment still remains bullish but perhaps the timing for higher prices is now being put towards the back of the year, coinciding with the US presidential election.

A sharp drop in conditions but still above the 5 average. More in line with our expectation for a slower profile of growth to justify the rate cut last week.
