learning=from experience is best done in simulation first; when it matters money has been spent on god simulations (air flight; tanks fighting etc); we have built what we call social (as oppose to physical) simulation for business and military -- it is how I make a living); they are not physical experiences, and keeping costs down is always an issue, but they seem real enough but computer science is very different; if you want to build=something in CS there is nothing to simulate since the computer is doing that naturally; you are already in the real environment; the computer speaks=a language and you must learn it; if I wanted to teach you a foreign language (which I have done too) I could put you in that country in simulation and you could talk; still to start you would need to learn some words first; our language programs assumed you knew some already but you dont know any HTML; so=you must learn it first; since books have done this, we have no need to replicate them; so this not representative of what we usually build; we already have a computer that speaks the language; we dont already have a simulate= medical or legal environment for example so we would have to build it and=then we could throw you in
