Hey Lar=y --

I know you have already complied=with this AD, especially after having your wings repainted. Who did =he paint thickness check on your controls? You have a very odd scena=io going on here, especially since it culminates around FL028. Maybe=when you pull both power levers back it slows the plane enough to cancel t=e flutter issue. Strange how I felt a stronger airframe vibration on=the LH side. N1JR (S/N 1066) did not have a flutter issue that I kno= of (also fresh crew operating the plane), but this aircraft was found to =ave too much paint, and it had to be stripped and repainted. I actua=ly watched and verified the measurements when our A/C was painted two year= ago.

Do you feel =he vibration in the rudder pedals or controls? I noticed yoke moveme=t today, but that is pretty normal from what I have seen in the past.

I hope you get it resolved, I =an see Jeffrey's issue with the flutter. I will let you know what our =light schedule is as soon as I find out.
