Jeffrey –

Thanks for the quick response. You make a fair point. Let me explain the reasoning behind the presentation in the memorandum. The lawyers discussed your point in the course of creating the document and decided on balance that we would gain credibility -- and therefore be more persuasive -- by addressing up front the context in which the legal issue arises. Also, I will have spoken with people before sending the memorandum so they won't be receiving it cold. My plan is to get people, during a conversation, past the point of reflexively turning away from the subject matter before sending the document.

Happy to discuss further if you wish or answer any other questions you may have.

Regards,

Greg

i would put the risks of the court opinion in the first paragraph, to underscore the issue, otherwise some might not get past the sex related offence. but of course leave it to your judgment.

Jeffrey and Darren –

I've attached the memorandum that I'm sending to potential amici who express a sufficient level of interest in potentially submitting a brief. Marty Weinberg and Kathy have reviewed the attached memorandum.
