Hey,

So, = forwarded your email to David and we discussed. In addition to the =act that the proposal was unsigned by Boris (but let's leave that =side), David doesn't like the note structure because his attorneys=believe he will have more protection as the general partner of a new vehic=e that actually owns the shares. Rather than potentially obtaining a=judgment and having to collect from Boris personally.

David would like Boris to choose one of the two offers he submi=ted to Gunderson, based on Gunderson's original framework (the one=you sent to me and then I sent it to David and then his attorneys edited i= and then David signed it and sent it to Gunderson). He expects Bori= to choose one of those structures, make a counter proposal, initial his c=anges, sign the document and have Gunderson send it back to David.

At this point, I would really like to limit my involvemen= and the time I spend on this. So, if you think Boris can work with =ou and his attorneys to counter one of David's proposals in writin=, I think that would be best and most efficient. It's all th= same economics anyway.

Peter
