If you intersted in details: =A0

When I had my technical admission interview in=January, they told me that the earliest spot was June 29th, which I though= was odd. I think it might something to do with my inability officially to=work in US. 97% of their students get hired as programmers and the school =ets placement fees. And according their rules, they require full tuition p=yment within 4 weeks of the acceptance.

But I'm not=waisting my time:

Since enrollment, I have been s=udying everyday on my own. I enrolled in several online platform which tea=h coding. Links bellow shows what courses, projects, challenges I've f=nished: [REDACTED]

I'm getting ready for hackreactor pre=c=urse work assignment which they release on April 27th. I think by the begi=ning of the school I will have solid (mostly theoretical) understanding of=intermediate/advanced javascript and in the school I will learn more pract=cal skills.

To keep my endurance, I have be=n exercising regularly: running 5miles twice week, yoga, 1mile open water =wim in SF bay and I'm planning to do 50-72 miles bike rides sometime s=on. Next week I'm doing 10 days meditation course.

I'm very serious about my hack school. My goal is to get so=e consulting work as a full stack developer right after my bootcamp, while=I work on bridge project.

Eventually, I will be able to la=nch and grow several financially successful companies.

That wouldn't be possible without your help, so thank =ou again.
