

---

From: Joscha Bach [REDACTED]
Sent: Sunday, February 8, 2015 11:39 PM
To: Jeffrey Epstein
Subject: Re:
Attachments: signature.asc

> Am 08.02.2015 um 18:18 schrieb jeffrey E. <jeevacation@gmail.com>:

>

> is a happy accompanied by a smile differnet than one that is not. ?

Yes: 1. There are different kinds of happy (one for each drive that is =eing satisfied), and they probably have different smile-incidence. =Imagine: postcoital vs post vanquishing your enemy.) 2. People show =ifferent amount of emotion if others are present (but they also show =hen others are absent, or when they are themselves blind). Thus, smile =ay additionally result from a communicative intention (share emotion, =llow synchronization, demonstrate submission to group norms etc.).

> an anorexic is a reminder to the group ( women ) to eat. ?

In the same sense as a scene of a war crime is a reminder to be nice to =ach other? Semantics depend entirely on the other women, I'd think. For =ome, it might be a reminder to lose weight, or to write an angry blog =ost about the effects of patriarchy on beauty ideals.

> a happy smile a group reminder- sign?

Vast array of possibilities. Could be sign of dominance or submission, =cceptance or rejection of others (smile because you like what others =o, or to demonstrate your independence from them), etc.!