He's doing much better. He walked about 60m with the help of a high tech walker today, is doing basic functions himself after weeks of being unable to do so and is now daily assaulted by tough but well meaning Frau Therapists.

Still eating through a stomach feeding tube but with any luck will be swallowing solid foods on Monday and never look back.

Lots of visitors.

He is off the mechanical ventilator most of the time now but they employ it at night - just in case.

His hands and feet function well with the exception of his right hand which is running behind the game a little bit but STILL has good muscle tone so he needs just needs to rehab it.

He is - as expected - sending orders into the various organizations to let them know is alive and well.

Staff and Doctors are paying close attention to him and they seem to have a huge amount of experience in the nuts and bolts of this kind of injury.

I'll let you know on Monday when the Chief of Staff here (Dr. Christina Jurgens) weighs in on the progress officially.

Best,
Jim
