The Amazon lending business I invested in is looking to raise one year money at 12%. They are looking for $3-4mm as part of this first debt raise.

There is a 15% equity first loss tranche beneath the 12% Notes. Assuming you get 2 quarterly coupons you need a 1yr cumulative loss of 21% before you lose any principal which is highly unlikely given the underlying loan book. They are forecasting 5-6% cumulative annual losses. Given the amount of data we have from Amazon, their credit underwriting makes me comfortable with this estimate. Recall they are making 3-9 month loans in the 20%-25% range. Average size of around $25K. Repayment of principal and interest (via ACH debit) begins after 1-3 months. So effective duration is very short.

We can discuss more if you like but at 12% I want you to have first look.

For full disclosure I own 3% of the company and have money in the first loss equity tranche (along with Anthony and John).

Down the road as they develop a longer default history the equity tranche could be very interesting.

Let me know.
