Sure.

Have you seen that in the children's letter, they defended B=inco, instead of believing in Noam?

They wrote: &=uot;We have also been increasingly distressed to see t=at instead of feeling happy and relaxed, you feel impoverished. "

And they called Noam's le=ter "irrational", just to discredit what Noam is revealing.

I think they are thinking about starting a "legal battle&q=ot; against their father, to achieve whatever they want. They have b=en manipulating information for that purpose, including emotional ones:

They wrote: "On a personal level, =e are heartbroken to feel that we are kept at such a distance from you in =our new life. We were thrilled to learn that you had found a new par=ner, but we were grieved when we began to realize that this meant we are r=rely able to see you. Even email and telephone communication has become mu=h more limited."

This is not true. We meet them (Diane,=her husband, Avi and two granddaughters in the Wellfleet house last August= in a special trip to see them and we were not invited to stay overnight, =lthough I suggested that I wouldn't like Noam to drive back in the sam= day (not a word from them suggesting that we could stay for the night). I= a recent trip to Mexico (in an event with Lawrence Krauss), in the middle=of an intense agenda, we took time to see them (Diane, her husband and the=r daughter). Harry and his family stayed with us in the Cambridge apartmen= several times. Diane visited us in the apartment. Avi went there several =imes (recently I heard from the old maid, that Avi had told her that she (=vi) had never been allowed in our apartment in Cambridge). In the 5 =ears Noam and I have been married, Harry was the only one to call, on Sund=ys. After we moved here, he called once and then stopped calling. ♦=AO

Now they are implying that I am preventin= them to seeing Noam.

It is surreal.
