If I write him, I'm sure he'll say that he is reti=ent for the reasons he and Deborah have both outlined: his responsibilitie= as a trustee under the law.

And I'm sure he'll=say that he is acting on his own, as trustee, without consultation with th= children.

Valeria=forwarded this to me. As I already wrote, the idea that the children=would be thinking of suing him seems to me utterly outlandish, and if ther= is the slightest hint of any such thing, I will react instantly and decis=vely.

If Max has any such concern, he can simply resign=as trustee and do nothing. No one can sue him for telling his client= that he's not representing them any longer. He then does not ag=ee to distribute the funds and is completely free from the threat of any s=it.

My own feeling is what I wrote a little while=ago. Ask Deborah to draft a letter, and go on from there.

Does that seem OK to you?

re indemnity

max is worried that if he gives you money that the children will sue him.♦=A0 I am suggesting that the children sign a document that says they agree with the distribution and will hold MAX harmless for making it. .♦=A0
