Don, to say I am at a loss to understand why, more than seven months after this process began, this aircraft is still not on Jet's Part 135 certificate is the understatement of the day. Jet has provided us a myriad of reasons, starting with other planes in the queue ahead of this one, to the government shutdown, to the loss of personnel in the office of the TEB FSDO, to the holidays, but all I know is that during this same period we have managed to get other aircraft Part 135 certified in 6 – 8 weeks.

Most recently, the reports from Jet personnel have been that the aircraft would be on Jet's certificate by the 10th of January, then by the end of January, then by the middle of February and most recently by Feb. 24 (this last date allegedly coming directly from you). And here we are on Feb. 27 in no different a position than we were in July.

What's going on here?

Mike, thanks. Obviously would like to get it certificated 135 as soon as possible.

Brian

Thanks for the comments. I will forward them off to our contracts department for their review.

Realistically I would think that we could have the aircraft on the Part 135 certificate by the end of the third quarter. Possibly slightly sooner but a lot of this has to do with how quickly the FAA will respond.

Mike,

Attached please find our comments to the Dry Lease Agreement and the Management Agreement – clean and marked versions are attached.

Please review and let us know if you have any questions or if you would like to discuss.

Also, can you let us know how long it will take to have the aircraft listed on Jet Aviation's Part 135 certificate?

Best regards,

Brian
