JetTech Aerospace delivered its first BBJ♦=A0green completion in February and shut its doors not long after. Accordin= to the company's former v-p of completions, Colt Mehler, a stagna=t economy was the reason the Spokane, Wash.-based completion and refurbish=ent center went out of business.

"We had just delivered a great [BBJ] and the owners were happy with it, but there was little follow-on business," Mehler explained, "and the risk-versus-reward was no longer appealing."

JetTech was subsequently sold to Canadian manufacturer Conair Group, the parent company of The sole cabin completion by JetTech went to a San Francisco bay-area family. The BBJ's interior includes such features as a center island in the galley for food preparation, Honeywell's Ovation Select cabin management system, high-definition entertainment throughout, a 46-inch and two 42-inch monitors, a private stateroom with king-size bed and a private lavatory with shower. Extensive work went into the cabin environment and the average cabin noise level is said to be around 47 dB(SIL)—the same noise level as in a living room in the suburbs. <http://www.ainonline.com/aviation-news/aviation-international-news/2010-11-30/jettech-acquires-cascade-preps-first-bbj>
