Lawrence,

While I can understand how emotionally satisfying this must have been t= write, given how awfully you've been treated by ASU so far, if you=send it out, you're done. Period. You will have no hope=of winning at ASU, because everyone who reads this isn't going to think you're falsely accused. The=re just going to think you're an asshole. This thing=is just too dense and too angry. It will read to other people as bord=rline unhinged, because no one understands what it's like to actual=y go through this process. They don't know what it does to people.

Again, I understand where you're coming from, and I'm h=ppy to think about how we might want to incorporate some of this into your d=fense. But if you send it now, you are only going to throw gas on the=fire and make things worse. You will flat-out ruin your chances of any vindication during the internal process. I p=omise you that. It is, quite simply, suicide.

You should show this to Nancy, Jeffrey, and anyone else you trust. = I cannot imagine that anyone will think this is a good idea. Maybe w=en you're completely done with the process, you can issue something=like this. But not right now.

If you want to issue a statement, it should be along the lines of what I=sent you last week—a few sentences max, stating your innocence and y=ur intent to be fully vindicated by the appeal process. I've p=sted below a story involving another professor-client of mine, which includes what we did for him.

Let me know what time you'd like to talk tomorrow. Given t=e time change, do you want to say 1 Eastern?
