Mr Epstein,

The downsides I thought of were;

- Guys Mixing it adding too much or not enough water (Have to be reliable)
  - =C2 Solution -I will oversee directly at all pours to make sure its right
- Lead times
  - =C2 Solution - Order more than we need and store it or plan out pours 6-7 weeks out
- Price - however we will buy in bulk and dont have to rely on island batch plants.

That is it.

Kyle

Mr Epstein,

Yes Sir I thought about that. I know we have had issues with PSI and the mix designs of the concrete. I do have experience pouring up to 1400 yards a day (24 hour shift) so I can oversee this directly to make sure its done right. We have a few options here;

<iv>- I will operate the machine (temporarily) until I can train an operator we can trust (its as complex as running a grain combine=just need to track weights and do simple math)

- purchase a product like Vita-Concrete - this has portland cement / sand / a/g all mixed in we just break bags and add water and I can calculate how many lbs we need to order before pours

- Vita has premade mix designs up to 5000 psi and if we need more (dont think we will) then we can use additives like fly ash to up the psi

Very Respectfully,

Good Af=ernoon Gentlemen,

I went over to St John to see the two=Carmix trucks that are for sale and they are not worth buying. They =ould need total refurbishment to get them up and running properly. I=have pictures of them if anyone would like me to send. I think if we=want a mobile batch plant / mixer we should order a new Carmix truck (5.5 =L) that can mix 7 yards per batch. I have attached the specs on this=truck to this email.

Very Respectfull=,
