That's exciting to hear -

Arielle wanted to get out of the lab and move back to NYC with her husband - got a book deal and is consulting = food television show I think. She is still around as a directors fellow and is a resource as needed.

Molecular biologist just wasn't working out in terms of progress - not sure what he is doing now - probably going back to neuroscience (I got him from the Broad Institute hoping his background could be usefully applied out of discipline in plant science)

I've ordered it :) thx

To do this I'd need to add depth to my bio team, that's by far my weakest team in the lab currently. I recently let contracts lapse on Arielle and my molecular biologist as it wasn't working out. I'd want to add the following team and would need to do a search to get the best. MIT won't let me hire PhD Research Scientists, and likely quality people wouldn't accept, without secure multi-year funding. I'd propose 500k a yr for 3 yrs with the expectation we evaluate progress after year one as to year 2 and 3. The transparent cost break down is:
