My dear jeffrey, Just want to clarify:<=iv>

1. Do you want me looking for two bedrooms so that certain people can also spend time there. For myself, my priority is to be cost efficient and can manage even with an unfurnished studio, and def with a one bedroom=as long as its a decent area.

So its up to you. And then if we are preparing for my guest(s) should it be a separate room or would you want us to share a room.

Its all what you prefer as you know your plans. It makes a diff if I am looking for just me or if I am looking to make someone in=particular very comfortable there so that they will spend time there.(Or they could possibly use it as a base while sourcing furniture for you or something in Europe. Morocco is a hop away, Paris, Italy. These places all have good architectural and design things to research.)

Up to you,=as I say for me myself I would save costs and get decent studio unfurnished=and start with a desk, a matress and pretty trees.

2. Air B and B is way more expensive than something like Rightmove and dealing with agents.

3. Should I just get something for the first month of arrival and then do a proper look when I am there.
