I enjoyed the conversation too. =A0 Thanks for asking about the 27 cos. Most of these are either very=young newcos (15 in 2018) or I had minor/diluted shares. Also payback in biotech is slower than most investments. Even though=my Harvard lab is very frugal (reducing costs by 10 million-fold), and mos= our 90 employees get paid less than $60K per year, we still have many goo= ideas that don't get implemented. Also, last week I learned that our largest and longest grant won't be =enewable for the very odd reason that we have been too successful in peer-review. A few members of Congress '=ight' be looking for examples of 'Center of Excellence' =eams that are getting money year after year. (Sounds like Harrison Be=geron). <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Harrison_Bergeron> The administrators are afraid that one su=cessful lab could endanger many other grants (or even their whole program)= They aren't even that sure about the Congressional concern rumor, but this is still enough to derail my lab renewal.

Thanks again.</=>
