I disagree. I think having me reach out to their lawyer and say essentially, what the hell, would be useful pressure that would be expected from anyone who might conceivably sue. If you're not having me make that call, she's smart enough to know that it's because you're worried about money which means you are not a serious litigation threat. As I've said many times, I don't think you are a serious litigation threat, because I just don't think you want to spend the money, which is understandable. But they don't know that, and I think it would be useful to bluff this. Again, though, your call.

I think we should wait till I make my ask on wed and see how they react= Then it will be time to consider next action. Right now all I can quarrel a=out is procedure- why the cancelled meeting if I was going to speak to the d=an anyway. I haven't yet given them my request. Anyway will touch base on Wednesday.

I agree that that's nothing. Honestly, I think you should bring me in now—the fact that I'm not calling your lawyer right now speaks volumes, and not in a good way for you—=ut again, totally your call.

I am going to come up with a counter proposal and will give it to him on Wed and we will see what happens or whether we have to move forward to the next step.

Buzzfeed contacted me about the state press story, and I responded that I expected to have more information by Friday or Monday. <=div>
