

---

From: MARK TRAMO [REDACTED]
Sent: Friday, September 28, 2018 8:49 PM
To: Jeffrey Epstein
Subject: Creativity, composers, and the brain

If you are interested in looking at brain activity while a composer is creating, I think quantitative high-density EEG analysis is the way to go - one can compare when they are listening and performing re-existing music to when they are composing new music...

--

Mark Jude Tramo, MD PhD
Dept of Integrative Biology & Physiology, UCLA School of Letters & Science

Dept of Neurology, David Geffen School of Medicine at UCLA Dept of Musicology, UCLA Herb Alpert School of Music

<=div>
Director, The Institute for Music & Brain Science Co-Director, University of California Multi-Campus Music Research Initiative=(UC MERCI) <http://www.BrainMusic.org> <<http://www.brainmusic.org/>> <http://merci.ucsd.edu>
<<http://merci.ucsd.edu/>>

</=div>
[REDACTED]