I am doing fine. Working out. Eating well. Drinking occasionally but nothing special. Thanks for asking about that. Interestingly you and Justin have converging at this point. Justin's last words to me last week were that he has finished his proactive period until we discuss prep for meeting conciliation committee. What he told me to do is to think of some offer which in some ways allows them to say they are putting me short of what the dean suggestion. Basically allowing them to save face. I have been thinking. I will also forward you info on his last bill when I get it.

Got stuff from the Provost that I forwarded a few minutes ago. It gives some info. Item 6 made me laugh.

I will not take the bet. I hope you are ok. are you drinking? sleeping. what is your appeal strategy? how can you give the author of the nasty letter (dean) a way to walk it back. try to give them an out. ask them for a higher standard? preponderance too low? if you don't get sacked you need to create a record of no realitaoon against you.! is there student demand for an on line course.? I would like you to come up with solutions FOR THEM . & BTW I told you so 's are not my thing. = . if they were my bag is already full :)
