Jeffrey:

FYI. I gave Michael the all clear. We're going to continue to chat.

The "expansive claim" is the prosecutorial view that various presidential actions, eg firing Comey, may have constituted obstruction of justice. Bad theory.

Hugs, Ken

Don't hesitate to say no if it's at all uncomfortable.

"Might such an expansive claim win, yes. Should it win, no. But everyone knows the reality: weak president's lose cases, strong president's win them," said Ken Starr, the former independent prosecutor who might know more about the legal pursuit of the president than anyone else on earth.

And thanks so much for chatting the other day. I look forward, if you are game, to much more. m
